

Opt-Out Methods

for Law Enforcement Professionals

1. ACCURINT (SEISINT)

Accurint® is a widely accepted locate-and-research tool available to government, law enforcement and commercial customers. Its proprietary data linking and analysis technology, LexisNexis® Link ID™, analyzes billions of partial and complete records, and then filters and links that information based on relevance to provide a picture of an individual.

Accurint will consider your request for opt-out after receiving the required documentation. LexisNexis retains the right to determine the databases to which the request for removal will apply and the duration of the removal period. LexisNexis will consider requests for opt-out for good cause and retains the right to determine whether to grant or deny such requests.

An individual may request opt-out if one of these conditions exists:

1. You are a state, local or federal law enforcement officer or public official and your position exposes you to a threat of death or serious bodily harm; or
2. You are a victim of identity theft; or
3. You are at risk of physical harm.

2. CHOICEPOINT

ChoicePoint provides businesses, government agencies and non-profit organizations with technology, software, information and marketing services to help manage economic risks as well as identify business opportunities. Consumers have free access to the reports we create at www.choicetrust.com.

ChoicePoint enables consumers to opt-out of its public-facing products by submitting information by mail or via an online form. It also permits consumers to opt out of its direct marketing products. It complies with the national Do-Not-Call (DNC) requirements and honors requests through that service.

In addition, it complies with state opt-out laws, where applicable, and security freeze laws. For example in California, a public safety, elected or appointed official may submit a request to ChoicePoint and it will opt them out of its public facing products (i.e., KnowX and ChoiceTrust). It also permits consumers who can establish that they are victims of identity theft or under a substantial risk of physical harm to opt out of its public facing products.

Your request will prevent your name and address from being used in unsolicited communications from ChoicePoint Precision Marketing and its customers.
